Research Information Exchange Markup Language

This product is a RIXML mark-up of a Goldman Sachs Morning Summary product. This product contains both a video and audio summary of morning call notes.

The source includes generic contact information for the publishing team 'Investment Research' that authored the compilation as well as the IDs and contact information for any analysts that were specifically mentioned or whose companies were mentioned in the audio or video.

The content is comprised of both an audio resource and a video resource. Each is tagged with length in minutes, length in bytes (not a real number in this case), language (of the resource), mimetype, and name. In this case since the actual data would be rather large, we decided to send a URL.

For the context we first indicate that it can be published externally and that this is a periodical. We then indicate all of the companies that are mentioned by name during the summary. This is intended for an institutional and retail audience as well as our sales force. The subject is Morning Call, the discipline is Investment, the asset class is Equity and the asset types being discussed are stock. This is a related chain but since the summary is primarily an update for investment decisions, the product's focus was set to Discipline, where I indicated investment. We also indicate all the RIXML defined industries mentioned by name and attach those to context. According to the product category definitions, this was most close to a comment.
